Fake mews? Confusion over cat at Thai king's coronation ceremony

King Maha Vajiralongkorn's three-day coronation cost roughly $31.4 million.

Animal lovers in Thailand were thrown into confusion on Sunday over whether a Siamese cat presented to the newly crowned Thai king and his queen was a living feline — or not.

Thailand is holding three days of coronation events for King Maha Vajiralongkorn, 66, who was officially crowned on Saturday in elaborate ceremonies.

It is tradition at royal coronations to present a cat — as well as several symbolic household items — to a new monarch as part of the private Assumption of the Royal Residence blessing ceremony, which was held on Saturday at the Chakrabati Bimani residence.

Cats are considered lucky by many Thais and the tradition of giving one as a housewarming gift signifies a stable home.

On Sunday morning, several Thai media outlets carried a photo of two uniformed palace officials next to what appeared to be a docile Siamese cat and a fluffy white rooster. The image, distributed by the Bureau of the Royal Household, was not captioned.

But by afternoon, the Thai-language news site Manager was reporting that the palace had used a "cat doll" instead of a live cat.

A palace official, contacted by Reuters, said: "The royal ceremony required the use of a rooster and a cat. It should not be the focus whether the animals were real or not, but instead the ritual itself is important."

Reuters was unable to independently confirm whether live animals were used in the ceremony or the photograph.

A Facebook page Maewthai.com — "Thai-Cat.com" — posted a copy of the palace photo with a message from a well-known cat breeder saying he originally had been asked to select two gentle male Siamese cats for the ceremony but his cats were ultimately not used.

"I feel grateful for His Majesty's kindness for feeling compassionate about the cats, fearing that the animal would suffer from waiting too long during ceremonies, so the cats were not used," said the breeder, whose post did not identify him by name.

The breeder did not directly address whether the cat in the palace photo was a doll.

That ambiguity confused some Thais who posted comments online.

"So is it real or fake cat?" a Facebook user called Niphawan Rakpon-tee asked.

Another user named Kritaya Parichayan said, "It's a real cat isn't it?"

"This is likely a stuffed cat," user Prapaporn Tongprasan said.

Thailand has strict lese majeste laws carrying prison sentences of up to 15 years for insulting the king, queen or the heir-apparent.

Historical images of the 1926 coronation of King Rama VII, the current monarch's great-uncle, show a group photo with female members of the royal family holding both a Siamese cat — a breed that originated in Thailand — as well as a rooster.

The tradition of using cats in royal household ceremonies dates back centuries, said historian and writer Sujane Kanparit.

"The meaning of having a cat is that it brings warmth to the household. It is an old court tradition that has appeared in the royal chronicles," he told Reuters.

Asked if the cat in the palace photo was alive or a doll, Sujane said: "I have no idea." REUTERS

Trump says Mueller should not testify on Russia probe

2 President Donald Trump on Sunday said Special Counsel Robert Mueller should not testify in Congress about the investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election. Trump said on Twitter that Democrats in Congress were seeking a "redo" of Mueller's report, which declined to conclude whether the president's efforts to impede the investigation constituted obstruction of justice. "Bob Mueller should not testify.

No redos for the Dems!" Trump tweeted. The Mueller report chronicled Russian efforts to help Trump win election in 2016 but found that Trump and his campaign did not engage in a criminal conspiracy with Moscow. Trump has derided the investigation as a costly "witch hunt" and sought to characterize the report's findings as a victory. The House Judiciary Committee appears closest to arranging for Mueller to testify, possibly as soon as May 15. REUTERS

Cyprus police find 5th victim of suspected serial killer

3 Police in Cyprus found a body in a lake on Sunday that they believe to be the fifth victim of a suspected serial killer who preyed on foreign women for almost three years without detection. Divers retrieved the body, which some reports suggested was that of a child, from a lake west of the capital Nicosia, the same location where a woman was found dead in a submerged suitcase a week ago. "A body has been found decomposed.

It is not identifiable and is being taken to the mortuary now for further inquiries," a police official said. The latest body was also in a suitcase, another official on the scene said. A 35-year-old career army captain has been in custody since late April on suspicion of killing five adult women and the young daughters of two of the victims. The semi-official Cyprus News Agency reported that police believed the body in the suitcase was that of a child. REUTERS

Death tolls rise in surging Israel-Gaza fighting

4 Rockets and missiles from Gaza killed three civilians in Israel while Israeli strikes killed 12 Palestinians, most of them militants, in surging cross-border fighting on Sunday, according to Gazan officials and the Israeli military. Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said he ordered the military to continue "massive strikes" against Gaza's ruling Hamas group and Islamic Jihad, in the most serious border clashes since a spate of fighting in November. Israel's military said more than 600 rockets and other projectiles — over 150 of them intercepted by its Iron Dome anti-missile system — have been fired at southern Israeli cities and villages since Friday. It said it attacked more than 260 targets belonging to Gaza militant groups. Gaza officials said Israeli air strikes and artillery fire killed 20 people including eight civilians since Friday. Cohen's new prison features matzo ball soup and full-time rabbi Trump's former attorney is scheduled to head to prison on Monday.

With a menu that includes matzo ball soup and gefilte fish, as well as a full-time rabbi and a chance at the occasional visit home, the U.S. prison where Donald Trump's former personal lawyer will spend the next three years is unique in the federal system.

Michael Cohen is due to report to the Federal Correctional Institute in Otisville, New York, about 70 miles northwest of New York City, on Monday.

The 52-year-old Cohen will be housed in dorm-like accommodations at the facility's minimum-security camp, which prison consultants say has become a destination for Jewish inmates due to its proximity to New York City's Jewish and upstate New York's Orthodox Jewish enclaves.

"He's going to what I like to refer to as 'Jewish heaven,'" said Larry Levine, founder of Wall Street Prison Consultants, who served a 10-year prison sentence that ended in 2007 for racketeering and other crimes.

Cohen, who once said he would "take a bullet" for Trump, was sentenced in December for orchestrating payments to pornographic film star Stormy Daniels and former Playboy model Karen McDougal shortly before the 2016 U.S. presidential election. Cohen said Trump directed the payments.

Trump, who has denied the affairs, said he never directed Cohen to do anything illegal.

Cohen received a three-year prison term for the payments and unrelated financial crimes.

At Cohen's sentencing hearing, his lawyer at the time, Guy Petrillo, asked that Cohen be sent to Otisville but did not give a reason for the request. Petrillo could not be reached for comment on the choice of prison.

Jack Donson, a former manager at the prison who now runs a prison consulting firm, said the camp was "a great place for white-collar Jewish guys."

Unlike most federal prisons, which periodically bring in part-time "contract rabbis," Otisville has a full-time rabbi, Levine said.

The federal Bureau of Prisons said in an email that only four of the more than 100 prisons run by the agency have full-time rabbis.

Another thing that sets Otisville apart is the food.

"The availability for kosher food is much greater," said Michael Frantz, another former inmate, who founded Jail Time Consulting.

The commissary menu on Otisville's website advertises matzo ball soup, gefilte fish and rugelach, a pastry, alongside Doritos tortilla chips and Diet Sprite soda. Kosher items are marked throughout with the letter "K."

The camp is not fenced in and inmates' movements throughout the day are not as tightly controlled as in more secure facilities.

Inmates are given jobs, which Levine described as "busy work" like cleaning or emptying garbage.

"The availability for kosher food is much greater."

Michael Frantz, former inmate

But, in practice, work hours at Otisville are short, sometimes one or two hours a day, said Justin Paperny, a former inmate whose consulting firm White Collar Advice has clients in the camp.

For much of the day,

Cohen "can pretty much do what he wants," Frantz said.

The camp offers weights and other exercise equipment, a basketball court, a tennis area and a baseball field, and bocce ball, according to its handbook.

Paperny also said Otisville grants furloughs — temporary releases for inmates, usually one or two days, which can be granted for family and other reasons — "in my experience more than other facilities."

Cohen is married to Laura Shusterman, 49. They have two adult children, Samantha and Jake. REUTERS

At least 41 killed after Russian plane crash-lands in Moscow

Survivors claim a lightning strike may have caused the disaster.

Forty-one people on board a Russian Aeroflot passenger plane were killed on Sunday, including two children, after the aircraft caught fire as it made a bumpy emergency landing at a Moscow airport, Russian investigators said.

Television footage showed the Sukhoi Superjet 100 crash bouncing along the tarmac at Moscow's Sheremetyevo airport before the rear part of the plane suddenly burst into flames.

Many passengers on board SU 1492 then escaped via the plane's emergency slides that inflated after the hard landing.

The plane, which had been flying from Moscow to the northern Russian city of Murmansk, had been carrying 73 passengers and five crew members, Russia's aviation watchdog said.

Svetlana Petrenko, a spokeswoman for Russia's Investigative Committee, said in a statement that only 37 out of 78 people on board had survived, meaning 41 people had lost their lives.

No official cause had been given for the disaster.

The Investigative Committee said it had opened an investigation and was looking into whether the pilots had breached air safety rules.

Some passengers blamed bad weather and lightning.

"We took off and then lightning struck the plane," the Komsomolskaya Pravda daily cited one surviving passenger, Pyotr Egorov, as saying.

"The plane turned back and there was a hard landing. We were so scared, we almost lost consciousness. The plane jumped down the landing strip like a grasshopper and then caught fire on the ground."

State TV broadcast mobile phone footage shot by another passenger in which people could be heard screaming.

President Vladimir Putin and Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev expressed their condolences and ordered investigators to establish what had happened.

The Interfax news agency cited an unnamed "informed source" as saying the evacuation of the plane had been delayed by some passengers insisting on collecting their hand luggage first.

Russian news agencies reported that injured passengers were being treated in hospitals.

DEBRIS IN THE ENGINES

The Flightradar24 tracking service showed that the plane had circled twice over Moscow before making an emergency landing after just under 30 minutes in the air.

The plane's undercarriage gave way on impact and its engines caught fire.

Interfax cited a source as saying the plane had only succeeded making an emergency landing on the second attempt and that some of the aircraft's systems had then failed.

The emergency landing was so hard that debris had found its way into the engines, sparking a fire that swiftly engulfed the rear of the fuselage, the same source said. REUTERS

"The Pleasure Is Mine" is all about empowering women to speak up about sex and pleasure.

MOLLY GIVEN
MollyGiven@metro.us

In the era of the #MeToo movement, Times Up and the overall empowerment of women there has been a lot of talk about what women don't want. The importance of having your voice heard is paramount, but it's not all about what females don't want in their lives. It can also be about what they do want. KY wanted to explore that notion regarding women and their pleasure and recruited creative director Lauren Greenfield to make an important docuseries, "The Pleasure Is Mine," happen. Greenfield teamed up with Emmy Award-winning director Amy Berg and together this dynamic duo empowered everyday women to speak up about what they want and break the stigma around conversations regarding sex. Metro sat down with Greenfield (LG) and Berg (AB) to learn more about the docuseries, hear their thoughts on why there is such a stigma and overall get a sense on why women's voices need to be heard on this subject.

Where did the idea for "The Pleasure Is Mine" come from initially?

LG: KY wanted to do a docu-piece about women's pleasure and sexual empowerment to break down the taboo about talking about women's pleasure, so that's where it started. We had this new company we had just launched, Girl Culture Films, representing a group of incredible female directors for commercials and branded content, so when this came from KY I immediately thought of Amy Berg, who is such an amazing documentarian. [Amy is] not afraid to ask any tough or uncomfortable questions. She came up with the idea of, in the context of this piece, bringing in Dr. Holly Richmond and a sex therapist in an educational setting in a way where a really diverse group of women could talk about all of the taboo issues around sex and what gets in the way of women's pleasure.

In this day and age, why do you think it's important for women to have this conversation about sex?

LG: Well, I mean, of course it's been an incredible time with female empowerment. Just from my point of view, talking about non-consensual sex has been so important and in a way it kind of paved the way to also have a conversation about consensual sex and how women can have a voice and have empowerment in the bedroom to also have pleasure, which has been a kind of not-talked-about thing. In a way, it's like the next step, that expression and voice. Just on that point, one of the girls in the project says, "If we don't know what feels good, it's hard to know when to say no." I think that it's a piece of choice and empowerment. Women talked about sometimes looking at their watch and just waiting for it to be done and that kind of thing, and of course in that setting it's consensual sex. But it's this idea that women can break through the boundaries and actually also find pleasure and also just talk about their sexual needs and desires.

AB: I think that there was this kind of overall feeling after the last presidential election and conversation about women being disrespected. "Locker room talk" became such an important narrative, and then the Women's March stepped onto the stage and allowed women to support each other and be empowered by their presence. For me, I was documenting the women's movement the past couple of years and I was just watching the power of the sisterhood and seeing how much comes from talking about things amongst ourselves and really being vocal about things that have been taboo for years, such as sex. I was watching women stick up for what they didn't want, so when this job came I thought it would be interesting to talk about what women do want and how to express their power. I thought through a group setting there would be something interesting that would happen in the room.

Since this is all about women having a difficult time speaking up about what they do want, did you find that the participants were hesitant when discussing this subject? Did it take some time to get them to talk about it?

AB: I think it was easier in the group setting, but of course there were some women that were quieter in that first round. But I think once they all established a rapport with each other, there was extreme power in the room.

LG: One of the big surprises for me, I feel like Amy was comfortable talking about anything and so uninhibited but I actually didn't know if we would find women that wanted to talk about this, and who were just a cross-section of everyday women. I was really surprised that it almost seemed like people wanted and needed to talk about it. There's just something cathartic even just talking about it. So people were actually really excited to have the opportunity to talk about things that they had obviously thought a lot about before but hadn't had a chance to talk about so openly.

AB: There was kind of a nervous thrill when people would talk about sex for the first time and say certain words, and then it became normalized like any other sort of conversation. We have to overcome the hateful language around women who are promiscuous or women who enjoy themselves during sex. That is what we've learned with this, like I said, with this kind of movement, reclaiming our power.

"The Pleasure Is Mine" was released on April 30 and is available to stream now.

4 Apps that will make co-parenting easier

LUZ LANCHEROS | METRO WORLD NEWS | PHOTOS: ISTOCK, CONTRIBUTED

The traditional family model has changed, thus single and divorced parents form a large part of the population.

In 2016 in the U.S. alone, 1,300 new families were formed and 50 per cent of the members had remarried, according to a report by the Stepfamily Foundation. Likewise, 66 per cent of couples who lived together or were just starting to may (by now) have broken up. The same is happening in other regions around the globe. Here, Metro highlights applications that can guide both parents and their children.

1. Our Family Wizard

It costs $99 and features a calendar to set activities, organize expenses, as well as chat that helps to be in contact with the other adult involved. Our Family Wizard also has a function that makes banking information accessible to each parent. It is available for Android and iOS.

2. Talking Parents

It's free and also has a plan for lawyers and parents. Talking Parents is mostly a message platform between parents that leaves a record of all the interactions. It has a Premium plan that allows access to more tools (such as message files) at a cost of $4.99. Only two adults can use this app.

3. 2Houses

It was created by Gill Ruidant in 2011 after separating and looking for an interface that would help her communicate with her ex-partner to organize the care and well-being of their son. The platform helps you to be aware of all activities, manage expenses and exchange medical and schooling information. It is accessible on the web as well as on iPhone and Android. 2Houses costs $6.49 per month.

4. Coparently

It costs $99 per year or $9.99 per month. There is also a free 30-day trial. You can add children to Coparently to communicate with them. The app features a custody calendar, a tool to calculate shared expenses, as well as access not only for children but for other adults involved in the process.

Is being single a new global trend?

According to statistics, more and more people around the globe think about living without being in a couple as adults. Metro investigates the phenomenon.

MIGUEL VELÁZQUEZ
letters@metro.us

Data from the independent think tank Pew Research Center confirms that the marriage rate has decreased in recent years. At the same time, the number of divorces has significantly grown. Statistics state that at least 25 percent of the population will never marry. And that phenomenon is spreading around the globe, making new generations the loneliest in history.

"It is happening all over the world," Erick Linenberg, professor of sociology at the Institute for Public Knowledge, New York University, explained to Metro. "Marriage rates are down in Europe and in much of Asia, in particular. And in recent years the nations with the greatest increase in people living alone include China, India and Brazil."

He added: "I believe that the global rise of living alone represents the greatest social change of the last 60 years that we have failed to name or identify. I'd bet everyone who's reading this can think of someone in their life who's currently alone. It's an extraordinary social experiment, and one that's worth following closely."

It could be a positive thing

Experts agree that being single is a global trend, which involves more and more people over time. But according to Paul Dolan, professor at the Department of Psychological and Behavioural Science of the London School of Economics and Political Science, it is "perfect" as long as it makes them happy.

"The main point is that people should stick to something that makes them happy... without harming others, of course. And we should not judge them harshly if they go against social expectations," he stated. "So, if being single make those people happy, then it is a good thing."

Dolan commented: "We should not ignore the fact that more [single] people will probably mean fewer babies being born, and that is great from an environmental point of view. Oregon State University researchers compared the potential impact of completing six "green" activities with the simple decision to have one less child. The six environmental habits included fuel-efficient driving; halving annual car mileage; fitting double glazing; using low-energy light bulbs; replacing an inefficient fridge; and making sure all paper, tin and glass was recycled. Adopting all six pro-environmental activities can reduce your carbon footprint by an impressive 486 tons. But if you have one less child it could be reduced by 9,441 tons — potentially 20 times more.

Rather than not getting married at all, new generations prefer to postpone it and give more space to their careers. According to Nancy J. Smith-Hefner, professor at the Department of Anthropology at Boston University, in the U.S. there is a name for that.

"There is a term for the phenomenon that was first proposed by anthropologist Diane Singerman: 'waithood.' That is, young people are putting marriage off for a variety of different reasons. And as a result, adolescence and full adulthood has expanded.

"The issue is that young people are deciding to avoid living together as a couple. They rather prefer to go to school or push their careers than get married. Although that does not mean they do not have relations," Smith-Hefner said.

The professor made an example of Japan, where it was revealed that 36 percent of local males aged 16 to 19 confirmed that they had "no interest" in sex.

"Such people are referred to as 'herbivore men.' They are protesting against the fact that the types of jobs their fathers had are no longer available. They are against the commodity of love and romance and resent the economic expectations placed on them by women. And this is having a major impact on birth rates and the economy."

Smith-Hefner concluded: "But it's not just men who are putting marriage off the table. Women are doing so as well. They have now surpassed the number of men attending university in many places around the globe. And as a result, they prefer education and work instead of a couple."

Bruins can put series on ice

The B's can move on to the Eastern Conference Finals with a victory tonight.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

In the third period in Game 5 on Saturday night at the Garden, the Bruins scored just as many goals as they had in Game 2 and Game 3 against Columbus combined.

The lesson here is that nothing is for certain in playoff hockey.

Goaltenders Tuukka Rask and Sergei Bobrovsky have both looked like Marty Brodeur in his prime at various points in this series but both finally looked vulnerable in that frenzied third period in which the Bruins found the net three times and the Blue Jackets also scored thrice.

Also out of the ordinary in Game 5 was the resurrection of David Pastrnak, who finally looked like the Bruins' top goal scorer that we saw throughout the regular season. Pastrnak lit the lamp twice on Saturday, including the game-winner for the B's when he redirected a cross-ice pass from Brad Marchand past Bobrovsky.

"They broke through the other night and now they're feeling good about themselves," Bruins head coach Bruce Cassidy said about the B's top line. "They're dominant when they're on, and when they're feeling it, it's a tall task for the other team."

It will be interesting to see if the relative offensive explosion from both teams will continue in Game 6 tonight (7 p.m., NBCSN) in Columbus or if it was simply a quick break from the norm.

Carlo the clamp

The longer these series' go, the more Brandon Carlo will become a factor. Carlo has effectively become the Bruins' superstar stopper, matching up with the opposing teams' top offensive weapon.

In the first round

Brandon Carlo.

GETTY IMAGES

against Toronto, Carlo was all over Toronto's Auston Matthews, particularly in Games 6 and 7. Matthews was a minus-1 with one goal scored in Game 6 and was a minus-3 without having registered a point in Game 7.

Artemi Panarin, who produced 87 points in the regular season, had a monster Game 2 for Columbus in this series as he had two goals and an assists. Since then, however, Carlo and company have done a tremendous job on the winger.

In Game 5 on Saturday, Panarin was a minus-1 and did not score.

Tortorella retort

"Things happen for a reason ... We'll be back here for Game 7."

cause according to Blue Jackets head coach John Tortorella there is going to be a Game 7 in Boston that night.

"The surge we had in the third [in Game 5], we came back, absolutely," Tortorella said of Columbus finding its offense despite the loss. "Things happen for a reason. We have chances to tie it again, doesn't happen. Things happen for a reason, and I truly believe that. We'll be back here for Game 7."

C's need tightened 'D' tonight

The Celtics could certainly use a Marcus Smart return.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

What a difference a week makes.

A week ago there were TV analysts/homers like Paul Pierce saying that the seven-game series between the Boston Celtics and the Milwaukee Bucks was "over," as it didn't seem like Milwaukee could recover from a devastating blow-out loss in Game 1 at home.

At the time, the Bucks seemed like wide-eyed fawns, still not ready for prime-time despite having gotten their playoff sea legs under them last year in a seven-game series with the Celtics.

Now, however, it is the Celtics that look ready to crumble and the Bucks that look like they could end this series before it reaches a Game 6.

No defense for poor defense

The Celtics desperately need to tighten things up on the defensive end as they have allowed 123 points to Milwaukee in back-to-back outings.

Giannis Antetokounmpo is going to get his 25-35 points on a nightly basis in this series. That's the given. It's what the Celtics do with Milwaukee's supporting cast that will be the difference.

As he did a year ago in the playoffs, Bucks swingman Khris Middleton is dominating the C's. In the 10 playoff games that the two teams have played in the past 386 days, Middleton is averaging 23.7 points per game. That's pretty good for a guy who has hovered around 18 ppg the past few years.

The brunt of Middleton's scoring is coming in transition after a missed Boston shot. Antetokounmpo or Eric Bledsoe will push the ball up the floor and get the ball to Middleton either in the corner or on the wing where Middleton will have wide-open looks before the Celtics defense can get set.

"It's tough. He's really good," Celtics coach Brad Stevens said of Milwaukee's oft-overlooked forward.

"He's an All-Star. He's one of the 12 best players in the East this year and has had a good year, and he started that in the playoffs last year against us. But we have to do a better job on him. We did not do a good enough job on him all the way down the line. He still might make it, but he got way too many looks where it was just too open."

The Celtics could certainly use a Marcus Smart return right about now. Smart practiced on Sunday and is "hopeful" to play in tonight's Game 4 at the Garden (7 p.m., TNT).

Smart hasn't played in 29 days after going down with a torn oblique.

Aries Stop worrying about what others do or say, and start trying to perfect who you are and find out what you want to achieve. Don't let others control your destiny.

Taurus Size up a situation, set your objective and make it happen. Don't let anyone else interfere. Stick to what's realistic and within budget.

Gemini Consider the possibilities and head in a promising direction. How you get along with the people you encounter will determine your success. Offer help, truth and kindness.

Cancer Your objective should be positive change. Offer suggestions and solutions, and be open to what others have to contribute. If you force change on others, you'll end up in a stalemate.

Leo An offer may sound good, but before you follow in someone else's footsteps, get the lowdown on what's expected of you. If it's a good fit, take charge and enjoy the ride.

Virgo Put your energy to where it will do the most good. Opposition will surface regarding sensitive issues, but if you focus on learning and self-improvement, much can be accomplished.

Libra Taking care of your responsibilities will ease stress. Spending time with someone who shares your likes and dislikes will bring you closer together. Romance is highlighted.

Scorpio A change will help build momentum and bring you closer to something or someone that inspires you. Be practical when it comes to money matters and joint ventures.

Sagittarius Fix up your space, pay attention to important relationships and take time to make subtle improvements to your appearance. A proper health routine will show favorable results.

Capricorn Make improvements at home that will lower your overhead and add to your comfort while lowering your stress. Do things for the right reasons.

Aquarius It's up to you to bring about positive changes at home and in your social life. Reconnecting with someone from your past will confirm that you are headed in the right direction.

Pisces A steady pace will be in your best interest. Refuse to let emotional matters spin out of control and eat up valuable time that should be spent doing something positive. EUGENIA LAST
